(By Associated Press.) ...EW YORK, July 10.—The new pier of the Scandinavian-American line at the foot of Seventcenth Street, Hoboken, was destroyed by fire to-day for the second time in three years, the line is temporarily without a pier. It is believed the loss will amount to almost $500,000.

The dock alone cost $200,000 to build. The fire started in the store room of the pier, and when discovered had a firm foothold. There was no ship of the line in port. The steamship Island should have in port. The steamship Island should have docked to-day, but did no tarrive. On the pier was a large part of the cargo destined for Europe, which was to be shipped on the Island, and this was destroyed, causing a loss of over $300,000. When the first fire engines arrived, fully three hundred feet of the pier was blazing from the water's edge to the top. Tugs of all sorts and sizes threw water into the fire, but this seemed to have little effect. The city firemen were badly hampered in reaching the place.

There were three explosions, apparently caused by barrels of some inflammable material. After each explosion the flames spread very rapidly. The heat was intense and many firemen dropped into the river for relief.

The slight wind carried the flames toward the Tletjen and Lang dry-docks, containing a score of wessels. These which could be gotten out were towed away.

These were in peril for a time, but the wind shifted, carrying the flames out over the river. The naval reserves on the Portsmouth did good work in keeping the fire from the bulkheading.

Within three-quarters of an hour after the fire started it was under control.

For a day his remains lay at Bennett's undertaking rooms unidentified. Lee was employed by General hillips on his con-tract for double-tracking the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac Road. The body was taken to Petersburg yesterday afternoon for burial.

Burned Hole in Bridge.

A small hole was burned in Mayo's Bridge yesterday morning. The damage was slight. The toll-keeper accounted for the blaze by saying that probably some one threw a cigar stump upon a plank which had been 'frazzled' by heavy wheels and likely to catch readily. The report that the sun's direct rays ignited the bridge is regarded as a joke.

TRAGIC DEATH OF OF J. B. GRAHAM

Conference Here in April. Guest of Mr. Gordon.

Was Speaker at Educational

The tragic death of Mr. Joseph B. Graham, of Talladega, Ala., last Monday is a source of much regret among his friends and acquaintances here.

Mr. Graham, according to reports from Talladega, was standing with a young lady, Miss Jeannette Johner, beside some freight cars on a siding at the Talladega station. Both, it seems, were leaning danger is past now."

"We are atraid to go with you," was the reply, as the two gentlemen proceeded on their way.

Councilman H. L. Patram, who was at the corner, when the buggy turned into Cowardin Avenue, said he had not noticed any drunken soldier, and his testimony in reference to the sudden exit of the soldier from the buggy was important.

Mr. Patram said, in his well known stenitorian tone that he was satisfied in his own mind that the soldier jumped from the buggy, but he would not swear to it as the soldier was between him and Taylor, and he could not say that the latter did not push him, as he could not see him from where he stood.

As Mr. Patram finished this remark a voice from the courthouse window, coming from a man who was leaning in the window from the outside, said loud enough to be heard scross the court room:

"You bet he jumped out!"

As there are yet a large number of civilian witnesses to testify it is hardly probable that the hearing will close today. There are thirty names on the list, and not half of them have yet testified.

A most important witness to be introduced this morning will be a small boy, known generally as "Sea Pat," but whose real name is Russell Cosby. This boy is believed to have been an eye-witness of what transpired in the buggy before the soldier found himself on terra firma, with Taylor fleeing out Cowardin Avenue.

This boy was called yesterday evening, but he could not be found. It was stated last night that he would be available this morning at 16 o'clock, when the hearings will be resumed.

The inquiry into the causes that led up to the death of Luther Taylor, and the rights of the soldiers in the premises, was begun yesterday morning in the court room of the Corporation Court. Mr. Charles L. Page represented the Commonwealth as its attorney, and the millita was represented by Mr. C. V. Merebith at the suggestion of the Governor and Colonel Angerson.

Graham and Miss Joiner were thrown under the wheels of the freight and terribly mashed. They died in a short while from the injuries.

Mr. Graham was in Richmond last April in attendance upon the Conference for Education in the South. He was one of the speakers on that occasion, and was a field agent of the Southern Education Board. He was a lawyer of promise and ability. While in Richmond he was the guest of Mr. James R. Gordon of this city.

the court room, hoping to be able to hear all that went on, but Coroner Brodnax, in order to conduct the hearing without interruption or confusion, had the court recom cleared of all persons save those directly interested, those who took part in the inquiry and newspaper men.

The first witnesses called were F. E. Leas. Emmett L. Andrews and Horace E. Clements, three of the men who were in the party the time the arrest was made. They stated in substance that they were driving up Hull Street, in Swansboro, when they met a car with soldiers aboard. The party in the buggy were singing as they reached the car. They were halted, and one of the soliders demanded to know which one of the party lied shouled "scab!"

There was a general denial. Neither Bass or Clements heard the word used, but Andrews said it was used, but by whom he could not say.

The whole party was placed under arrest on the command of Capitain Bowles. Bass, Andrews and Clements were put alroard a car, while Taylor was permitted to remain in his buggy. The car and the buggy then proceeded toward the station house in Manchester, the huggy going ahead.

the bugsy then proceeded toward the teation house in Manchester, the bugsy going ahead.

As the car, upon which the three men were being carried down town, passed Cowardin Avenue they heard the shooting, but did not know until later that Taylor had been shot.

Henry Walton, the next witness, said that he was standing at the corner of Hull Street and Cowardin Avenue when the bugsy with Taylor and the soldier in it came along. There was nothing to indicate that the horse was running away or even going faster than the average. About ten feet within Cowardin Avenue he heard the soldier call "captain!" Then the horse started faster, and the comment later by a shot, which seemed to be the signal for general shooting. Taylor was driving when the horse turned into the avenue, and the soldier sat in the back seat. Didn't see how the soldier got out of the bugsy, but he got out soon after turning the corner.

Robert B. Taylor was near the corner on Cowardin Avenue when the bugsy came along at a moderate speed. He heard no conversation, and paid little attention to it until a small boy came to him hurriedly and told him that a man and a soldier were in the bugsy and the man wouldn't let the soldier get out. At that time a crowd began to gather, and in a moment he heard a number of orders of "halt!" given, followed by a shot; then two shots in quick succession from near the door of Masonic Temple, while a second later two more were fired from the opposite side of the street. His impression was that the guns he saw fired were pointed in the air.

p OFFICER ALVIS TESTIFIES.

Policeman A. A. Alvis testified that he Policeman A. A. Alvis testified that he took charge of the men at the point at which they were arrested, and took them to the station house. He said when the car had just passed Cowardin Avenue he heard the shooting, and that the solders jumped off the car and ran behind Schwartz bar-room and fired over toward Cowardin Avenue, across the field. The car then proceeded to the station house. In answer to questions, Mr. Alvis said that some of the soldiers stationed in Swansboro looked like men who did not know what they were doing. He heard that some of them had taken drinks, but he did not know. He didn't think the two men who jumped off the car knew what they were shooting at, for he didn't. They were not the same men who had been stationed in Swansboro. Thought at least that twenty-five shots were fired.

who had been stationed in Swansboro. Thought at least that twenty-five shots were fired.

Following this evidence, Mr. W. P. Gilliam deposed. He was standing at the corner when the buggy turned into the avenue. The horse was going at a log. In a minute there was some commotion, and a small boy ran up to the corner and told about Taylor not letting the soldier get out of the buggy. He heard a number of commands to halt, and then some shots were fired. He did not know who was in the vehicle. He had not noticed any disorder or drunkenness among the soldiers at that point. Archie Williamson did not see the shooting. He was coming from the Semmes Avenue bridge, and was one of the first to reach the fallen horse and the wounded man. He heard a soldier named Cook say he had fired and caught the horse. Mr. Williamson described the wound, and said every indication pointed to the fact that Taylor had been shot from the rear, on the left side. He saw no intoxicated soldier, but thought Cook was excited.

Special Policeman O. W. Pond saw Tayevening, and noticed that they had been drinking, but were not drunk. He kept his Swansboro. He was in the shoshoro. He was in the hood when the shooting in Cowardin Avenue started.

"I saw two soldiers on Hull Street just ahead of me," he said, "rush a little way into the field back of Schwartz's and shoot in the direction of Cowardin Avenue. When they returned to the sidewalk I asked them what in the world they did that for, when people were sitting out on their front stoops. They replied that they couldn't stand there and let people shoot at them that way."

JUMPED FROM THE CAR.

He also saw two men jump from the car and run to Hull and Cowardin Avenue, and was sure that at least one of them fired down the avenue. He then ran down the avenue and reached Taylor before he became unconscious, He heard him ask for Horace Clements several times, and then asked: "What have I done?"

Chief Lipscomb did not know anything Chief Lipscomb did not know anything had previously warned Taylor to stay at home, as he had given indication that he would get into trouble. He had heard that some of the soldiers had "dissipated" but he did not see one intoxicated while they were in the city.

The next witness was Captain J. J. O'Brien, who admitted that he was excited on the night of the shooting, and was just as discourteous to a certain soldier as the latter was to him, when he ordered him to move along.

ordered him to move along.
"I must say," said Captain O'Brien,
"that the man was drunk."

"I must say," said Capiain O'Brien,
"that the man was drunk."
Witness was standing at the corner.
The entrance of the buggy upon the scene, did not attract his attention until he heard an exclamation which he could not say was "Help!" or "Halt!" Then a crowd gathered, and he found himself in the hands of a solder who told him to move on.

He described the scene as one of the wildest confusion. Firing came from fields and both sides of the street, and people were running helter-skelter. He feared for his family, living on Cowardin Avenue, opposite Forier Street, and ran home, where he found all well.
He saw the horse pass in front of his house, and under the electric light he saw that Taylor was beating it unmerelfully. When Capiain O'Brien reached Taylor's prestrate form, he saw that he was fatally wounded.
"I was opposed to the soldiers coming over here in the first place," said the witness, "and I must admit that I was greatly excited, for my home was directly in the firing line." Harry B. Owen was on the corner, but didn't notice anything wrong until he heard the cry "help!" and a call to the guards. He thought the firing was at the ground. He heard no shooting from across the field or from Hull Street.
There was not much excitement at that point after the shooting, and he thought there were about twelve or fifteen shots fired.

Councilman Patram was the last witness before adjournment. He saw the party go up Hull Street, and later noticed the buggy come back with Taylor and the soldier in it.
